The slightly greenish to yellowish lemon oil is obtained by cold-pressing the fruit peels. The oil of yellow lemon – as we know it from grocery shopping – is called Citrus limonum while the oil of green lemon, primarily used to make candied lemon peel, is sold as Citrus medica. It has anti-inflammatory, antipyretic, haemostatic and antibacterial properties, enhances the immune system by activating the formation of white blood cells, strengthens the metabolism and has a neutralizing effect. Lemon oil therefore is one of the most versatile essential oils. Its refreshing aroma can be used in various stages of life and may prevent a number of diseases. Since years scientists in England are trying to research its cancer preventing effect. Almost all of our bath or body care products contain lemon oil and furthermore also many of our tangy fresh fragrances.
